The Sale Techniques

Fable & Mane's website excels in creating a clean and visually appealing experience by using neutral and light shades of purple, coral-red, and beige. The site effectively showcases large, clear product photos, blending them with lifestyle images to tell the brand's story.

They integrate social proof by featuring real photos and reviews from social media, adding authenticity. Interactive elements like quizzes help users find the right products, and blog posts mix product information with general hair care tips to provide value.

Simple animations, like sparkling stars and moving stamps, add a touch of interest, while a sticky rewards button encourages visitors to sign up and stay engaged.

UX/UI

- The site does not feel uncluttered when scrolling.
- They sticks to the neutral/light shades of few main colours (purple, coral-red, and beige)
- Uses big, clear product photos . Mixes in lifestyle images to tell a story about the brand
- Shows photos and reviews from actual posts from social media
- Has quizzes to help you find the right products
- Blog posts mix product info with general hair care tips .
- Have simple animation (sparkling start, circle moving of stamp, to make the site a bit interesting

The Sale Techniques

LUSH's website stands out by using a vibrant and colourful design, which makes the pages visually appealing and full of energy. The site is thoughtfully put together with minimal white space, giving it a cohesive and recognisable look. Product names are presented in a fun, handwriting-style font, adding a playful touch.

Instead of traditional dropdown menus, LUSH uses a unique side-scrolling menu with rounded, pill-shaped buttons that extend beyond the screen, adding a creative twist.

The Sale Techniques

The website effectively uses short-video backgrounds instead of static images, adding dynamic visual appeal. A white background with plenty of space gives the site a clean and modern feel, while custom fonts add a touch of uniqueness. Easy navigation is ensured with a sticky menu, and social media feeds on product pages boost engagement. The blog page stands out with customised featured images and cross-sell opportunities, while relevant articles help explain products and build customer trust. Engaging call-to-action text like "yes, please" and the option for customers to leave reviews directly on product pages further enhance the user experience.

05. E.L.F. Cosmetics

The Sale Techniques

E.L.F. Cosmetics does a great job of organising their website with a drop-down menu in the header, fitting in options like gifts and rewards without creating clutter. They enhance product pages with video adverts that show how products work, and they have a special section for customers to share photos of themselves using the products, adding a personal touch. The site features clever buttons that allow you to select and add products to your basket without leaving the page, making shopping quick and easy. The collection page is kept neat with a four-column layout, and a FAQ section addresses common customer concerns directly on the page. With a sleek black-and-white colour scheme and seamless block transitions, the site feels modern and smooth as you scroll.

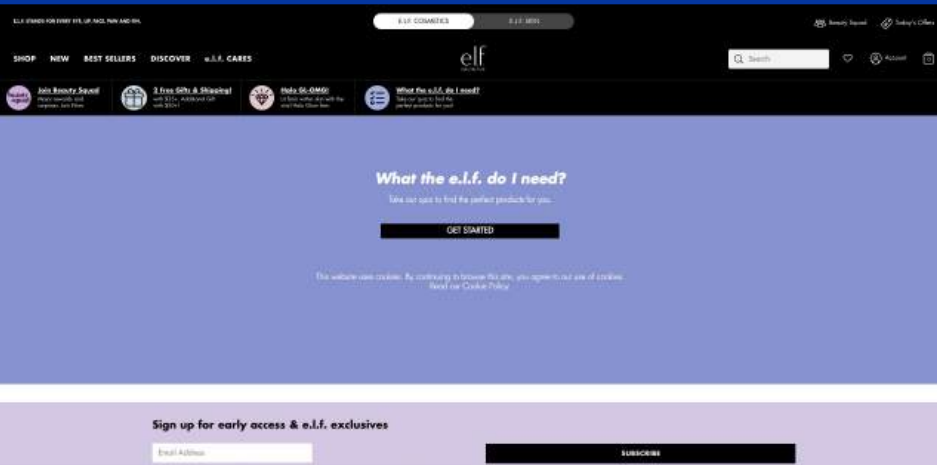

UI & UX

- Uses a drop down menu to fit more options like gifts and rewards in the header
- Puts video ads on product pages to show how stuff works
- Has a special spot for customers to share pictures of them using the products

- Uses clever buttons that let you pick the type of product and add it to your cart without going to another page
- Keeps their collection page neat with four columns of products
- Adds a FAQ section on the collection page that answers common customer worries
- Sticks to black and white colours to look modern and sleek
- No spaces between block creating seamless experience while scrolling
